TN becoming "training centre" for extremists: Minister

COIMBATORE, FEB 15/- /Union minister and senior BJP leader Pon Radhakrishnan has claimed that Tamil Nadu no longer remained a peaceful state, but is turning out to be a "training centre" for extremists. Addressing a meeting organised by various Hindu outfits and the BJP to pay homages to those killed in the serial bomb blasts here on February 14, 1998, he alleged that Tamil Nadu is "becoming a camp and training centre" for such forces.

"Tamil Nadu is no longer the peaceful state ('amaidhi poonga')... Naxalites, Maoists, Tamil extremists and the state government of not allowing hands against the administration, which was evident during the jallikattu agitation last year," the Union minister of state for finance and shipping declared. Stating that these forces were engaged in a long-term plan for the next 10-20 years, Radhakrishnan said it was not known whether this had been brought to the notice of the government and the police department.

The massive agitation in support of jallikattu at Marina Beach in Chennai and elsewhere in the state turned on January 23 last year, when the agitators continued to protest despite the promulgation of an ordinance to allow the bull-taming sport.

The minister accused the state government of not allowing him to pay homages to those killed in the serial blasts 20 years ago - that claimed 52 lives - during an
