Will KCR's gamble for Telangana pay off?

Kalyani Shankar

Telangana, the country’s youngest state, will face elections for the second time since its birth in 2014. Chief Minister K.Chandrasekhar Rao took a big call by imposing several police prohibitions ahead of the polls. His move is aimed at ensuring that the elections are free and fair. Rao's government has been accused of giving land on the outskirts of the capital city of Hyderabad to the TRS leader K.T. Rama Rao as his number one supporter, anti incumbency, and the failure of the TDP and the Congress to deliver results.

According to the Telangana action committee, which has been successful in the Loksabha elections, the Congress and TDP are losing ground. Rao's government is working overtime on the promising agenda of jobs and non-jobs, education, agriculture, and the like.

Thelok Sabha elections turned out to be a major success for Rao's government. The TRS has already announced that it will take on the Centre in the forthcoming election. Rao has promised that his government will bring down the cost of living and ensure that the law and order situation is under control.

Rao's government has faced criticism for its handling of the COVID-19 pandemic. The state has beencriticised for its slow response to the pandemic and the high number of deaths.

Rao's government has also come under fire for its handling of the Cauvery dispute, which has been ongoing for decades.

Despite the challenges, Rao's government has managed to deliver some positive results such as the expansion of the Metro rail network, the development of the IT sector, and the implementation of the Ayushman Bharat scheme.

However, the party's performance in the upcoming election will depend on how effectively it can address the concerns of the people and deliver on its promises.