NEW DELHI, DEC 31 /- Over Rs 4,313 crore of stashed income has been detected by the Income Tax department after conducting over 1,000 raids and survey operations as part of its country-wide operations against black money hoarders post demonisation.

Official sources said the taxman has detected a total of Rs 4,313.79 crore undisclosed income and seized cash and jewellery worth Rs 554.6 crore as part of these operations, as per the data updated till Dec 29. disclosed income admitted or detected as part of the action conducted by the I-T department, till December 29, is Rs 4313.79 crore," they said. The agency has referred a total of 487 cases to sister agencies like CBI and the Enforcement Directorate to probe other financial crimes like money laundering, disproportionate assets and corruption.

Note ban: Ex-FM wants all restrictions to go

NEW DELHI: Insisting that opposition's concerns on demonisation have been found "correct", former Finance Minister P Chidambaram on Friday said Prime Minister Narendra Modi should now make a categorical announcement of an end to all restrictions on cash withdrawals.

When the Prime Minister addresses the nation tomorrow or on any other day, the people expect that he will make a categorical announcement that all restrictions on money have been ended," Chidambaram told reporters at AICC headquarters. The senior Congress leader said that the woes of demonisation should come to an end by this evening as the Prime Minister had asked for time till December 30. Noting that the Prime Minister had recently said at a rally that "through the note ban, in one stroke, we destroyed the web of terrorism, drug mafia, human trafficking and underworld," he said that it was therefore, fair to expect that these objectives would be achieved by the end of Friday. "It is fair to expect that beginning Monday, January 2, 2017, all restrictions on money imposed on November 8, 2016 will be removed and the people will be able to withdraw the money in their bank accounts. "It is fair to expect that there will be no queues outside bank branches and ATMs. It is fair to expect that all ATMs will be open round the clock and fully stocked with currency notes," he said. Chidambaram said that the "only person" who can assure the people on these matters is the Prime Minister because the government has "dubbed all of us in the Opposition as supporters of black money hoarders and tax evaders." On government's claim that people are happy and there have been no incidents of rioting, he said, "people are patient. But please don't mistake patient people for happy people." Seeking to debunk government's claims on the benefits of demonisation, he said "Events of the last 50 days have proved us correct. Hoards of black money in new Rs 2,000 notes have been found." He further said that bribes have been given and taken in new Rs 2,000 notes and there is "no guarantee" that black money will not be demanded or generated in future or that bribes will not be given or taken in future in the new currency. Dubbing the way the demonisation was announced and implemented as a "single biggest case of total mismanagement," he regretted the most momentous decision has been taken "without consulting key officials."

Making a strong pitch for compensating people for the hardships they faced, he lamented that the government has "not uttered a word" about compensating the people for the economic losses heaped upon them by demonisation. He also demanded that the agenda note and the minutes of the meeting of the Board of Directors of RBI held on November 8, 2016, along with the Note for Cabinet on demonisation placed before the Cabinet on November 8, 2016, should be made public. Co shortlisted for plastic notes appears to be blacklisted: Ex-Kerala CM

KOCHI, DEC 31 /- Former Kerala Chief Minister Oommen Chandy Saturday said one of the four companies said to have been shortlisted for supplying plastic notes appeared to be "blacklisted" which he felt smacks of corruption.

Producing portions of a copy of a report of the Public Undertakings Committee of Parliament in 2013, he alleged that the company was named in it for not meeting certain security parameters for printing 1365 million pieces of Rs 100 notes during 1997-98. The parliamentary panel, then chaired by Jagadamba Pal, had cited grave implications of such move and "fervently emphasised that outsourcing of printing of currency notes/minting coins should never be resorted to in the future", Chandy said. "Now, a company against which the Parliamentary committee had given a report in 2013, has been roped in by the Government for supplying plastic notes. It is a big scam. A joint parliamentary committee should probe it," Chandy said in a Malayalam note distributed at his press conference here. He said the parliamentary panel has noted that the very thought of India's currency being printed in three different countries is alarming to say the least.

With Congress leader and Parliament's Public Accounts Chairman K V Thomas by his side, Chandy, citing newspaper reports, claimed that the banknote manufacture was earlier "blacklisted" by the Union Home Ministry. (PTI)

Mobile bookings, solo & weekend trips top travel trends in 2016

NEW DELHI, DEC 31 /- 2016 saw a growing number of people going solo, travel getting cheaper and an increase in the number of online bookings, particularly on mobile phones, reveals studies conducted by different travel portals.

Backpackers across the country decided to take to the road with the year witnessing a rise in the number of "new age" travellers who believe in "experiencing the unknown, encountering different people and cultures, and testing new limits". According to a recent survey conducted by travelling portal Yatra.com, "11 per cent travellers opted to be their own travel agents" in 2016. The year also saw globetrotters choosing short haul travel concentrated around long weekends and holiday seasons, rather than going for customary yearly vacations. Extended weekends served as opportunities for people to escape their monotonous city routines and indulge in short getaways.

"Approximately 40 per cent of our domestic holiday bookings this year happened for the shorter breaks. Most of our weekend packages to destinations close to metros were sold out during the long weekends, leading us to increase our inventory and provide more options to last minute travellers," the study said. Owing to the evident preference of Indian travellers for shorter, but more frequent breaks during the year, Yatra.com noted that the earlier camps were in the coming year. Travel, both domestic and international, became easier in 2016, particularly because of low and discounted air fares. A study by global travel search engine Skyscanner revealed that Singapore and Bali continued to remain favourite international destinations, with the Lion-city-state recording the highest growth with a whopping 202 per cent average increase in searches since 2013, followed by Bali with 35 per cent average growth in searches in the past three years. "Singapore draws the attention of travellers from across India, thanks to relaxed visa regulations, diverse culture, and its multitude of tourist attractions. Whether a solo trip or a family holiday, we anticipate Bali to remain on top due to relaxed visa regulations introduced in 2016," the study by Skyscanner noted.

While destinations like Europe, the US, Dubai and South East Asia continue to attract the bulk of tourists from across the country, Australia, New Zealand, Mauritius are some more niche destinations that have seen excellent traction at home, southern India and the south-western coast saw an impressive influx of tourists. Coorg, Ooty, Kodakanal, Goa and Kerala witnessed a persistent interest from enthusiastic Indian travellers, throughout the year. Travel was encouraged in 2016, due to the convenience rendered by online and mobile booking packages to a large number of travellers adopting the emerging trends in technology, indicating that a majority of bookings in the next few years will be made on mobile phones. "We have seen close to 40 per cent of our bookings and 67 per cent of our traffic is coming via the mobile website and mobile applications," Yatra.com said. The ban on old Rs 500 and Rs 1000 notes further led to a significant 57.9 per cent travellers booking through desktops and smartphones and a drastic dip in booking through offline agents. (PTI)

SRINAGAR, DEC 31 /- Termining the opposition to SC ruling on the SARFAESI Act with respect to Jammu and Kashmir as "completely misplaced", State Finance Minister Haseeb Drabu on Saturday said that the apex court has only reaffirmed that the state laws prevail.

"I think we will have a lot of occasions to discuss this in the Assembly, but I think it (opposition to the SC ruling) is completely misplaced. The opposite has been doing that for very very long." While speaking at a Jammu and Kashmir Bank event, Drabu told reporters that "there is nothing in the Act (to be opposed). In fact, it reaffirms quite a few things, one of which is that the Transfer of Property Act actually prevails over SARFAESI (the Securitisation and Reconstruction of Financial Assets and Enforcement of Security Interest Act). According to him, banks cannot sell any immovable mortgage property to non-state subjects.

In the event of a bank taking recourse to property, they cannot sell it to a non-state subject and in the last budget, I had already made a provision for an asset recovery company with the J-K Bank which can buy these impaired assets," he said. "So, I think the
